Teaching them a lesson: A report on the attack on Zimbabwean teachers

20 September 2002

A report by the Research Unit of the
Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum

INTRODUCTION

The attack of teachers has been ongoing against the backdrop of violence being perpetrated against civil servants (including district administrators, and nurses) by ruling party (Zanu PF) supporters, “war veterans” and the youth militia. Violence against teachers has continued unabated since June 2000. Violence against teachers has been concentrated in the rural communities where teachers are rightfully considered to be a group that has considerable influence on the communities in which they live. The reported attacks on teachers who support or are suspected of supporting the MDC seems to be a way of limiting their political influence on the rural populace. In July 2001 two ministers are alleged to have issued death threats against student leaders and their principals for supporting the opposition MDC. The threats were issued at a meeting between the ministers, student leaders and principals from Masvingo, Bondolfi and Morgenster teacher training colleges, Masvingo Technical College and Mushagashe Vocational Training College. The meeting was told that the only way that their safety could be guaranteed is if they supported Zanu PF. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Stan Mudenge reportedly said:

“You are going to lose your jobs if you support opposition political parties in the presidential election. As civil servants, you have to be loyal to the government of the day. You can even be killed for supporting the opposition and no one would guarantee your safety.”¹

The Minister of Education, Sports and Culture told the meeting that:

“We cannot continue to pay our enemies. People have to know which side of their bread is buttered”

The threats came a month after the Deputy Minister of Education, Sports and Culture allegedly said that his ministry would not provide security to teachers affected by violence for supporting the opposition.² The threats by the two ministers were seen by ZIMCET Executive Director, David Chimhini, as having exposed civil servants to possible attacks by ZanuPF supporters.

The brutal attack on teachers has had far reaching consequences that go beyond the teachers themselves. Violence also affects the schoolchildren, when, in some instances, they are made to witness scenes of extreme violence such as beatings and torture. Schoolchildren may experience behavioural and emotional reactions after their experience of violence against their teachers, who are supposed to be their guardians in the school environment. The Canadian Centre for Victims of Torture (CCVT) says that ‘a climate created by on-going organised violence can also produce generalised feelings of insecurity and uncertainty for children, thus making it impossible for children and youth to feel that they have a future’.

In some instances, school children have become victims during attacks on their schools. In the Midlands province, pupils from five schools were allegedly abducted and taken for re-education classes by “war veterans” and Zanu PF supporters. At Chomuwuya High School “war veterans” reportedly disrupted a prize giving ceremony in October 2001, while in Masvingo “war veterans” are alleged to have disrupted lessons at Rusitu High School. Therefore the addressing of violence against teachers is not only directly beneficial to the victims, but also for the schoolchildren who are also victims indirectly.

This report documents 238 individual cases of human rights abuses against teachers for the 18 month period between January 2001 and June 2002. The Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum believes the documented evidence that it has collected is merely the tip of a much bigger iceberg, and would wish to draw attention to the many previous cases reported in earlier reports of the Forum. We would also wish to draw attention to these many previous reports, and to note that a communication from the Forum is currently under consideration by the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights. As the Presidents of South Africa and Nigeria and the Prime Minister of Australia meet in Abuja on Monday, 23 September, to consider the Commonwealth's response to the Zimbabwe crisis, we hope that they will take into account this new report, as well as all the previous reports, including those specifically submitted to the Abuja initiatives.

There was only one report of violence against a female teacher in Matabeleland South. She was assaulted in November 2001 for not attending a Zanu PF rally. Soon after the Presidential Elections she was assaulted for having being absent during the voting period. The victim fled the area and sought refuge in Harare leaving behind her niece who was under her charge.

14 March 2002

On the 25th of November 2001 a group of six Zanu PF supporters entered GM's home at Zezani Secondary School while a group of about 25 remained outside chanting Zanu PF slogans. She was asked why she had not attended a Zanu PF rally that had been held at Lutumba at 3pm that day. She responded by saying that she did not know that there had been a rally. Jabulani Dube punched her on the mouth, resulting in her losing two teeth. She had to travel to Harare to seek medical treatment. During the Presidential Elections, GM went to Harare to vote. When she had returned, about 20 Zanu PF supporters assaulted her and, amongst them, were Elijah and Vincent Nleya of Dalibazimu in Beitbridge. The group was carrying a list of suspected MDC supporters and those who were absent during the voting period. GM and three others were told to go to Tsvangirai's country. They had to hitch hike into Bulawayo since they had been banished from the area. GM left her niece whom she was in charge of. She sustained injuries on her shoulders, chest and had internal side injuries. After the assault she was experiencing pain when breathing and could not sit for extended periods.

Reported Militia Bases

N.B The following is a list of schools that were reportedly used as militia bases in the run up to the March 2002 Presidential Elections. The information on the alleged was derived from Secondary sources. The Human Rights Forum was not able to independently verify them. The list was compiled from various coherent sources in which the same locations were reported as being used as ZanuPF militia bases. The bases were used as camping grounds, torture centres, and launch pads for terror raids. As the bases were in operation well before the election, and schools were only closed for the election weekend, it is highly likely that teachers and pupils were indirectly exposed to this violence in the least. It is even more disturbing to note that some of these schools were used as polling stations, which certainly affected the electorate's ability to exercise their right to vote without fear.
